

DualShockers Academy Writers

Interested in gaming enough to want to write about it? Have no experience in journalism, but possess a creative mind and can express yourself in writing? What are you waiting for? Apply to become a part of the DualShockers Writers Academy – and get paid for it too.

GRV Media is one of the UK's largest independent media companies, with over 120 website and YouTube content producers.

The company's flagship gaming website, DualShockers, is establishing a Writers Academy Programme. Talent will be given the first opportunity into the world of games journalism, with permanent positions available for those who impress on the programme.

Successful candidates will be offered full training on how to write and structure articles from start to finish, how to source news and develop many other skills important in games writing.

We are looking for individuals who have:

- A positive attitude, can-do mentality and a willingness to learn
- A huge passion for games
- A flexible approach to gaming topics including a wide interest in gaming culture

And who are:

- Self-driven and not afraid to bring fresh and innovative ideas to the table
- Driven to produce quality and engaging content
- Committed to producing up to 30x 250-300 word news articles a month with the further option to complete listicles, non-feature articles, as well as getting involved in other aspects of games journalism.

What we offer:

- Full training – no experience is required

- A paid programme from 1-3 months
- Commitment to supporting those that show passion to reach their full potential
- A positive focused and friendly working environment
- The opportunity to become a full-time staff member based on performance

This is a work-from-home role, and we are happy to receive applications from any part of the globe with a keen interest in those based in North America.
